

Why should not a woman choose the father of her child?"

"Annie, dear, please don't let your Irish sense of humor get the best of you."

"But, my dear Miss Margaret, I get so tired of that senseless kind of talk. Do you for one moment think that Mr. Dick or Miss Mollie's husband or my Terry chose any one of us? No. It was ourselves that did the choosing and we knew it, every one of us, when we did it. The woman who is howling about not being allowed to make her choice is not clever enough to see that she can always do the choosing, provided she will only let the man think he is doing it all the time."

"Annie," said Mollie, "where did you learn all this?"

"Well," answered Annie with a wide Irish smile, "it is not a thing that you can learn in school, Miss Mollie."
